ADDC is good for your company

As demanding as the energy industry can be, few companies continually train their employees with cutting edge information. Even fewer companies can afford to offer broad-based cross functional training. Your membership in ADDC helps your company by making you:

More effective because you understand what other functions need.

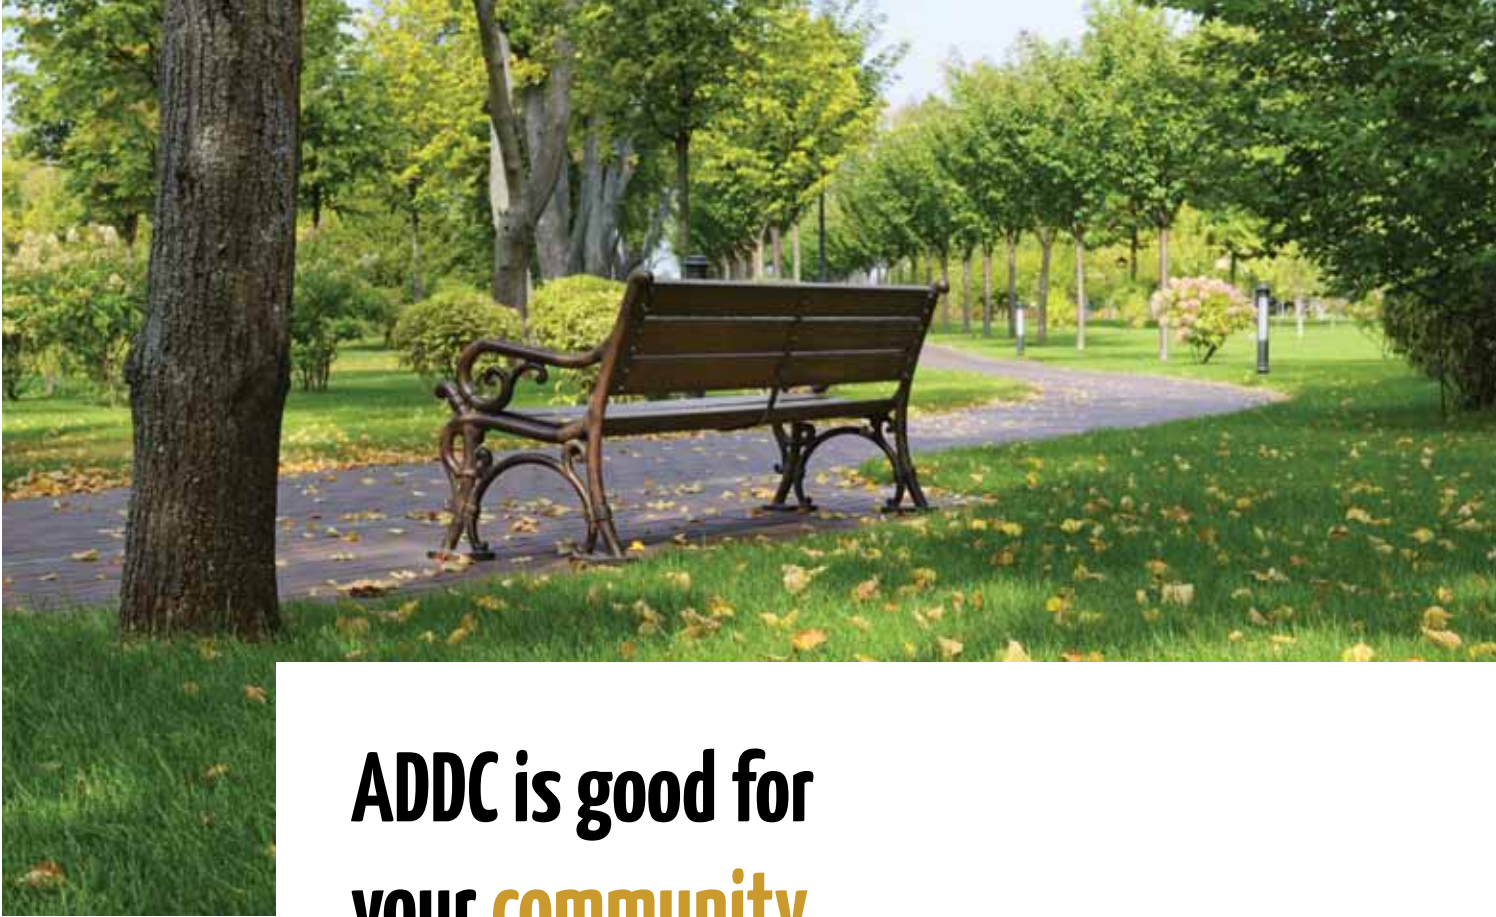

More efficient because you understand how everything in the energy production process comes together.

More valuable because you can access a broader network of resources and information.

ADDC is good for your community

Without reliable information, it can be difficult for your community to understand the benefits of local energy production. ADDC can serve as a credible source of information to help your community understand:

The benefits in terms of jobs and economic impact.

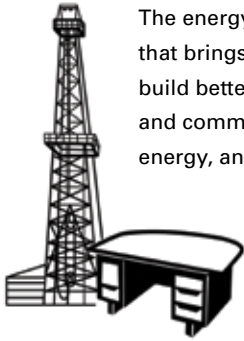

The long-standing importance of safety in energy production.

The security that domestic energy production provides in a challenging world.
